THE DESCENDANTS OF
JOHN JONES AND
JOHN MASON

Compiled by
MARIE CAROLINE de TROBRIAND ^UPOST
(Mrs. Charles Alfred Post)

INTRODUCTION.

In compiling this little book there has been no attempt to write a history of the Jones family. The work simply records the marriages and births which make up the records of its members, and establish the relationships of each branch. The genealogical tables show at a glance the different generations.

It seemed relevant to add to the pamphlet a biographical sketch of John Mason, as his sister and three of his daughters married into the Jones family. Their descendants would naturally be interested in a notice of the ancestor who occupied such a prominent position in the financial world of New York nearly a century ago.

5. Frances Jones; married ——— Rogers.

Jones Rogers, who married an Irish lady named Annesley—Annesley;* died leaving no issue.

This branch of the family is extinct.

Joshua, who survived his brothers and sisters, left his large fortune divided among the descendants of his uncles, John and Joshua Jones, and of his maternal uncle John Mason, whose three daughters, Joshua's cousins, Mary, Rebecca and Serena, married his three cousins, Isaac, Isaac Colford and George Jones.

* The widow of Jones Rogers, after the death of her husband and child, returned to Ireland and married Thomas Thorp, of Ballysax Manor, Co. Kildare.

In looking over this family record it is curious to note the gradual extinction of the name.

John Jones, Jr., and Frances Querean had three sons (John III, Joshua and Isaac) and twenty-two grandchildren, of whom fourteen were males. The entire branch of their youngest son Isaac was extinct with the second generation after them.

In the third generation after them there is only one of the name of Jones, descending from their oldest son, John III. Sidney Colford Jones, having changed his name to Jones Colford, leaves only James Henry Jones, who is unmarried, to bear the name in that branch.

Of the descendants of Joshua Jones only Frederick, Henry and Lewis Quentin Jones bear the name in the fourth generation, and only one, Arthur Mason Jones, in the fifth generation. As Henry is unmarried, and Frederick and Lewis Quentin Jones have no sons, it is probable that, in the course of time, Arthur Mason Jones will be the only descendant of John Jones to bear the family name.

APPENDIX CONCERNING THE NAMES QUEREAU AND QUENTIN.

Isaac Quantien and his three daughters, Judith, Susan and Jane, were born in France, and, being Protestants, were compelled to leave their country by the persecution of the Protestants which followed the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. They went first to Holland, then to England, and, afterwards, arriving in New York, settled on a farm in that part of Westchester County which then received the name of New Rochelle.

Joshua Quereau, born in France, emigrated in consequence of the persecution of the protestants, and settled in New York.

Joshua Quereau married Judith Quantien. Isaac Quereau, the youngest of the ten children of Joshua Quereau and his wife Judith, was born in New York on the 28th day of May, 1741 (old style). Isaac Quereau settled in the Island of St. Croix about the year 1768, where he married Ann Cooper on the 1st of January, 1775. She was a native of St. Kitts and a daughter of John and Jane Cooper, of that Island, and was born on the 25th of November, 1748.

Isaac Quantien Quereau, the only child of Isaac and Ann Quereau, was born in St. Croix on the 29th of March, 1778, and was baptized by Dr. Hugh Knox.

Isaac Quereau died in St. Croix on the 16th April, 1783. Ann, the widow of Isaac Quereau, married Richard B. Brainton in St. Croix on the 14th February, 1790. She died at Greenwich, Connecticut, on the 28th July, 1802, and was buried in the cemetery of the Episcopal Church at Rye. Isaac Q. Quereau sailed from St. Croix on the 10th April, 1793, and arrived in New York on the 5th May, where he afterward continued to reside.

Isaac Quantien Quereau, to adopt the orthography to the pronunciation of his surname began, on the 1st January, 1797, to write Isaac Carow.*

Isaac Carow married his cousin, Eliza Mowatt, on the 31st July, 1803. Eliza Mowatt was the daughter of John and Jane Mowatt and was born in New York on the 4th of May, 1783.

Eliza Carow, wife of Isaac Carow, died in New York on the 9th May, 1837.

Isaac Carow died in New York on the 3d of September, 1850.

Copied from the family Bible of Isaac Carow by his daughter,

LAURA FRANCES CAROW.

*He was the ancestor of Edith Carow who married President Theodore Roosevelt.

Letter from Mary Serena Jones (daughter of Isaac Jones and Sarah Mason) about the names Querean and Quentin.

"In the old family account books, letters, etc., the name of our progenitor is variously spelt—sometimes even beginning with the letter C. When my brother, John Jones, to distinguish him from numerous other persons of the same name, was advised by my father to adopt a middle name, giving the preference to the old family name, he took great pains to arrive at the proper orthography and finally decided to write his name 'John Quantin Jones.' In a conversation with Mr. Isaac Carow shortly after his return from Europe, after his second visit, he told me that he had been at Rochelle in France, the native place of our forefathers, and thought probably my brother had spelled his name correctly until afterwards in Paris in conversation with M. de La Fayette he was told by him that he was mistaken—that our family name was most decidedly Quentin—Quentin."

THE MASONS.

The Masons were a prominent family in the Colonial history of Rhode Island. The first John Mason came to this country in 1629 and settled a large portion of land around the St. Lawrence, Merrimac, and Kennebec Rivers. It is said that he was the son of Sir John Mason, Governor of the town of Portsmouth, England, during the reign of Charles I.

Of those who first came to this country, one brother settled in Providence Plantations and the other in Virginia.

John Mason, 1707, married	Betty Wanton
James Mason	" Ruth Saunders
John Mason	" Serena Collins
James Mason	" Mary Pitt

John Mason (the subject of these notes) married October 18th, 1800, Rebecca Clark.

JOHN MASON.

John Mason was born August 18th, 1774, at Taunton, Mass. His older brother George, who was born at Swansea, R. I., December 3d, 1772, and who died unmarried, was one of the "Indians" who boarded the tea ships in Rhode Island and destroyed their cargoes. He was later captured by the English and spent many years in an English prison.

John Mason's mother, Mary Pitt, married (1st) — Walker
(2d) James Mason
(3d) Abner Thayer

The issue of her first marriage was James Walker, who became a successful cloth merchant in New York City. *It was to this half brother, James Walker, that John Mason went upon his reaching New York, he having left New England because of friction with his stepfather, Abner Thayer. Upon the death of James Walker his estate was sold at public auction, and John Mason made his first business venture by buying cloth sold by the estate. His next venture, a very successful one, was exporting goods to China and India and getting Eastern goods in return.

*I have heard said that Walker Street was named after him—M. C. P.

NOTES ON JOHN MASON.*

If credit is due to any one man more than another for laying the foundation of the Chemical Bank so firmly that its financial stability has not been shaken from the date of its incorporation to the present time, that honor belongs unquestionably to John Mason. Although not the first President, he was among the organizers of the Bank and his hand virtually controlled its destinies as Director and President up to the time of his death, September 29, 1839.

John Mason was a prominent figure in the commercial centre of New York during the early part of the last century. He was a typical, self-made man of the old school, and by his own efforts he built up a fortune which was considered magnificent in those days. The word failure never stamped any of his enterprises, and while his name was sought as a director and stockholder in various activities, he confined his interests to a few well managed concerns. He was essentially a man of business. No merchant in the city possessed a shrewder insight into financial matters or was credited with more correct judgment. He believed in making money by the old-fashioned conservative methods, slowly, honestly, and when made, encouraged no lavish exhibition of its display.

Financial power, however, never sullied his innate modesty and kindly disposition, and after his death many in the lowlier walks of life rose up to add their tribute to his memory, for sympathy and help given in times of need. Although a conservative, there is one marked event in his life which shows that he was keenly alive to the progressive spirit of the age. He was one of the founders of the New York and Harlem Railroad, and its President when the first short line of track was completed on the Bowery in 1832. The car which carried the Mayor and other officials when they formally opened a new era of rapid transit for New York was named "John Mason."

* To the kindness of Mr. Francis Halpin, Cashier of the Chemical Bank, I am indebted for permission to use these notes which are from the manuscript of a history of the Chemical Bank now (1911) in process of completion —M. C. P.

John Mason's name first appears in the New York Directory for the year 1796 when the firm of Mason & Sharp is mentioned as "dry good store, 50 Williams Street, cor., Maiden Lane." The following year John Mason's name appears alone as "merchant, 208 Broadway." In 1798 he moved to 84 William Street, remaining there until 1800, when he returned to his former locality at 80 William Street. He stayed there until 1804, when the firm of Mason & Smedes was formed at 178 Pearl Street. The partner was Abraham K. Smedes, but in 1809 the latter's name ceases to appear, and in 1810 the firm is John Mason & Co., still at the same place.

John Mason, at this time, had risen to be one of the acknowledged leaders of those worthies now reverently referred to as "the old New York merchants." In 1811, the first mention is made in the directory of his residence at 337 Broadway between Worth, then Anthony, and Leonard Streets. This was one of the fashionable residential localities, and for his neighbors Mr. Mason had several of the wealthiest merchants in the city. Next door, at No. 339, lived B. C. Minturn, of the big shipping firm, Grinnell, Minturn & Co., and later the same house was occupied by John G. Warren, a leading Wall Street broker. Just below, at 335, lived Myndert Van Schaick, of the old John Hone & Sons' firm. Others in the block were Thomas Stagg, Jr., John H. Howland, Robert Troup, James Heard, William Denning and Jacob Le Roy.

The War of 1812 occasioned severe losses to many merchants, but they aided the Government liberally. It was difficult to get money, and it appears strange to-day to read that the United States Government had a hard time in securing a $16,000,000 loan authorized by Congress early in 1813. When, after considerable delay, it was learned that less than $4,000,000 had been subscribed for, the merchants of the city got together, as they have on so many occasions when financial aid has been needed either in or out of the country, and in a short time the whole amount was taken up. John Mason was one of the active workers in this patriotic endeavor, and his name is on the list for $5,000, while Isaac Jones, his son-in-law, and the successor of Mr. Mason as the Chemical Bank President, took $4,000.

Up to 1819 there was no savings bank in the city of New York. The first meeting for the establishment of such a necessary institution was held late in 1816 by a number of officers of the Society for the Prevention of Pauperism. John Pintard, Thomas Eddy and John Murray, Jr., were among its most earnest advocates, but for some time they had to encounter objections, both in and out of the Legislature. In 1819, however, success crowned their efforts, and on July 3d of that year, Saturday evening, at 6 o'clock, the bank opened its doors, occupying a modest little room in the basement of the New York Institution, then standing in the rear of the City Hall, fronting on Chambers Street. The sum of $2,807 was deposited that evening, $300 being the largest individual deposit and $2 the smallest. John Mason was one of the original trustees of the Bank, and he was present on the opening night.

John Mason's enthusiasm and active participation in the affairs of the New York and Harlem Railroad, mark him as one of the pioneers in New York rapid transit. The Company was incorporated on April 25, 1831, with a capital of $350,000, soon increased to $500,000. Campbell P. White was the first President, and John Mason, Treasurer. Mr. White, soon after, was elected to Congress, and at the Directors' meeting in August, 1832, John Mason was chosen President. John Lozier was Vice President.

A. C. Rainetaux, Secretary, and among the Directors were Samuel Swartwout, Isaac Adriance, Henry Ogden, Alexander Hosack, Samuel B. Ruggles, Thomas Addis Emmet and John R. Peters. On February 25, 1832, ground was broken for the railroad. The spot selected was a rocky section of Murray Hill, in Fourth Avenue. The rock had previously been bored, and, with true patriotic ardor, thirteen blasts were set off. John Mason made a speech which is said to have been received with great cheering, although Philip Hone remarks in his diary, "that Mr. Mason could make money better than he could make a speech."

The "American Railroad Journal," started in 1831, and the first paper in this country devoted solely to railroad interests, in commenting on the events of the day, said:

"Thus commences a single link in that great chain of internal improvements which is to reach from New York to Buffalo, and which, without fatigue and at moderate expense, will convey our citizens to Albany in a few hours."

Meanwhile, a line of track was being laid on the Bowery from Prince to Fourteenth Street, and on November 14, 1832, this was opened for traffic with great eclat. Two cars, drawn by horses, made the trip. The car in the van, which had as guests Mayor Walter Bowne and other municipal worthies, bore the name of "John Mason." A contemporary account of this first railroad trip in New York City will, doubtless, be interesting, and the following, which describes the cars somewhat more in detail than others, is from the New York "Courier and Inquirer" of November 15, 1832:

"The Mayor, Corporation, &c., left in carriages to the depot, near Union Square, where two splendid cars, each with two horses, were in waiting. These cars are made low, with broad iron wheels, which fit the flanges of the railroad, after an improved model from the Liverpool and Manchester cars. They resemble an omnibus, or rather several omnibuses attached to each other, padded with fine cloth, and handsome glass windows, each capable of containing, outside and inside, full forty passengers. The company was soon seated, and the horses trotted off in handsome style, with great ease, at the rate of about twelve miles an hour, followed by a number of private barouches and horsemen. Groups of spectators greeted the passengers of the cars with shouts, and every window in the Bowery was filled. The distance was not far from the old residence farm of Gov. Stuyvesant. "Those who made violent objections to laying down these tracks and fancied a thousand dangers to the passing traveller now look at the work with pleasure and surprise."

The statement is also made that, upon the completion of the road, "it will make Harlem the suburb of New York.

In 1842 Moses Y. Beach, the successful publisher of the New York "Sun" during its early years, issued a little pamphlet purporting to give the wealth and pedigree of the wealthy citizens of New York City. Only two names credited with fortunes of a million dollars or over appear, John Jacob Astor and Robert Lenox. John Mason had been dead three years, but his estate was still in the hands of his executors, and its value was placed at $800,000, one of the munificent fortunes of the day. Alexander T. Stewart was quoted as being worth an equal sum.

Several interesting letters appeared in the New York "Evening Post" in 1858, signed "Retired Merchant." The writer, who had evidently been a close friend of Mr. Mason, adds:

"Mr. Mason left a very large estate. No man in his time better understood investments. He was one of the most able bankers this city ever had. No panic ever alarmed him. His views were enlarged. He understood that mechanics needed money as much when it was scarce as when it was plenty. Often have I known him to discount, as President of the Chemical Bank, for merchants in distress at 7 per cent. when he deemed it almost certain that he would be obliged to use his own private securities to raise money to sustain the bank.

Rich as Mr. Mason was, his heart was bigger than his purse. There was no pleasure to him greater than to have a respectable mechanic come to him at a late hour, who had fifty men to pay, and knew not where to raise the money, which was worth, perhaps, two per cent. per month. Mr. Mason delighted to take such a man by the hand, and would kindly say, 'My good man, you must have the the money,' and give it to him at the legal rate."

At the time of his death Mr. Mason was living at No. 640 Broadway, where he had moved from his lower Broadway home two years before. He was sixty-six years of age, and had attended to his duties at the bank up to a few days preceding his fatal illness. Heart disease was the immediate cause of his death.

The "Commercial Advertiser," on Sept. 28, 1839, in mentioning his death, says:

"Mr. Mason had so long occupied a prominent station in the business interests of New York that his departure from among us calls for something more than a simple announcement. He ranked among our wealthiest citizens, having retired several years since from active participation in commercial affairs, with a large fortune, gained by his own industry and economy, first in mechanical and afterward in mercantile employment. He was upright in character, simple and unostentatious in demeanor, never forgetting that the riches he possessed constituted no merit, and that his title to praise was in the use he made of them."

The Mason and Jones families were related both by business and family ties and it is little wonder that in the early years, the (Chemical) Bank appears somewhat in the light of a family enterprise. Three of John Mason's daughters married members of the Jones family, Mary and Serena becoming the wives of brothers, Isaac and George Jones respectively, both of whom were directors in the Bank, while the former succeeded his father-in-law as President. Rebecca Mason married Isaac Colford Jones, a cousin of Isaac and George Jones. Another daughter, Sarah, became the wife of A. Gordon Hamersley, a large stockholder in the Bank from its organization.

Owing to litigation over the will of John Mason, the property remained in the hands of the executors until 1854, when the Supreme Court ordered a more equitable division among the children than had been designated in the original will. By that time, the property had increased enormously in value and the heirs found themselves much better off than would have been the case, had the estate been divided in 1839. The Mason, Jones and Hamersley families were the chief participants in the final settlement. The Court appointed as Commissioners in the partition Luther Bradish, Thomas Addis Emmet and Anthony J. Bleecker.

The property included Nos. 337, 632, 636, 638, 640 and 688 Broadway; the northeast corner of Broadway and Fourth street, 45 feet and 4 inches on Broadway and 267 feet deep; a gore of land on the southwest corner of Fourth Street and extending 45 feet along Lafayette Place; Nos. 21 and 126 Bowery, 92 James Street, 57 and 66 Cherry Street, 75, 76, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82 and 84 Division Street, 178 Pearl Street and eight blocks of Fifth Avenue property, extending through to Fourth Avenue from 54th to 63d Streets with the exception of the block between 56th and 57th Streets, Fourth and Fifth Avenues. Three large plots in this section, each 200 feet by 920 feet, Mr. Mason purchased in 1823 from the city for $2,500. They are described in the old deed as fronting on Middle Road, near Fifth Avenue.
